Before their marriage, a mage or wizard, whose name is never given except as the Enemy of Morred or the Wandlord, had paid court to Elfarran. Unforgiving and determined to possess her, in the few years of peace that followed the marriage this man developed immense power of magery. After five years he came forth and announced, in the words of the poem, Hardic rune with a light stroke through it, to cancel out the sorcery that lurks in it. no shadows here, only the dark, but he went forward, and went forward, until he saw Anieb before. This is a tale of those times. Some of it is taken from the Book of the Dark, and some comes from. Crow ranted, but at the mere thought that the Book of Names might still exist he was ready to set off for the Ninety Isles as soon as Tern liked. Medra knew the danger of repeatedly taking any form but his own, but he was shaken and weakened by. Ayo and Mead were much alike, and Otter saw in them what Anieb might have been: a short, slight. She had stopped trying to reach him, months ago, but her heart was. The Creation of Ea contains no clear references to an original unity and eventual separation of dragons and humans, but this may be because the poem in its presumed original form, in the Language of the Making, dated back to a time before the separation. The best evidence in the poem for the common origin of dragons and humans is the archaic Hardic word in it that is commonly understood as "people" or "human beings," alath. This word is by etymology (from the True Runes Atl and Htha) "word-beings," "those who say words," and therefore could mean, or include, dragons. Sometimes the word used is alherath, "true-word-beings," "those who say true words," speakers of the True Speech. This could mean human wizards, or dragons, or both. In the arcane Lore of Paln, it is said, that word is used to mean both wizard and dragon. himself, riding back to Westpool, and laughed. "I do indeed," he said aloud. The black mare nicked.
